A decade of ForeignExchange Translations

Company celebrates its tenth year in business

Waltham, MA, October 15, 2008 – Andres Heuberger founded ForeignExchange Translations in October 1998 with the singular vision to be the best provider of translation and localization services to the life sciences industry. This focus has helped drug and device companies gain access to, and build their business in, the increasing global marketplace. The company is proud to celebrate its 10th year in business this year.

Starting with only one employee and a small office in Providence, Rhode Island, ForeignExchange now employs over 50 people and has four offices in three different countries.

Through the years, the company has never wavered from its initial vision. By employing the best linguists, project managers, technical experts and sales people, and building robust, ISO 9000-certified processes, ForeignExchange now confidently calls itself the leader in medical translations.

Heuberger says, “ForeignExchange has become the company that I always hoped it would. The greatest rewards of our success are the great group of people on our team and a long list of trusting, respected client-partners. I look forward to our next ten years.”
